EPISODE 112

The 'Before' House

This 1860s house, once a three-story Victorian home, was built by the Civil War veteran who served as inspector general under Ulysses S. Grant. When the inspector general's granddaughter inherited the house in the 1950s, she decided it was too large for her needs and had the top two floors demolished to reduce the home's size. The

The 'After' House

After a year of labor-intensive renovations, the dramatic remodel has restored the home's original Victorian grandeur. The exterior has been completely transformed with new cedar siding, detailed trim embellishments, a gabled roof, a turret, and a graceful wrap-around porch. The project has also yielded 2,400 square feet of living current owners planned to rebuild the second floor to enlarge the home (which had the look of an ordinary 1950s rambler), and also wanted to recreate the Victorian style of the exterior.

space accented by a stunning cupola and rich woodwork that blends beautifully with the existing architectural details on the first floor of the home.
